Rethinking Global Education Through a Decolonial Lens

Global Education has long been grounded in knowledge frameworks that are largely shaped by Western perspectives. A decolonial approach invites us to re-examine global education practices by placing justice, diverse lived experiences, and the voices of local communities at the heart of the learning process. Through this program, participants are encouraged to understand how colonial bias operates within education, while also shaping learning approaches that are more equitable, inclusive, and contextually grounded. The session includes expert presentations and interactive discussions.
